

CHILDREN FEELING THEY HAVE NO SAFE PRIVATE SPACE AT HOME

WHY IT MATTERS

Home should be somewhere children can relax without performing or wondering whether they are being recorded. When cameras can appear in bedrooms, kitchens, cars, family conversations and emotional moments, children may feel there is nowhere in their own home where privacy is guaranteed.

CREATE PERMANENT NO-FILM ZONES

Children should always have spaces where cameras are forbidden.

PROTECT BEDROOMS

A child's sleeping and personal space deserves particularly strong privacy.

NEVER SECRETLY FILM CHILDREN

Hidden or unexpected recording can seriously undermine trust.

RESPECT CLOSED DOORS

Physical privacy boundaries should mean something.

PROTECT DOWNTIME

Children need periods when they know they cannot suddenly become content.

ALLOW AN IMMEDIATE NO

A child should be able to stop filming without argument, guilt or persuasion.

DON'T FOLLOW EMOTIONAL RETREATS

If a child goes somewhere private to calm down, leave the camera behind.

HAVE CAMERA-FREE DAYS

Privacy should involve periods of time as well as physical spaces.

REVIEW HOW MUCH OF THE HOME IS ONLINE

Years of footage can gradually remove privacy room by room.

MAKE HOME A SANCTUARY

Children should experience home primarily as somewhere they live, not somewhere content is produced.

BOTTOM LINE

Every child deserves somewhere they can close the door and know the audience cannot follow.